Housing Regeneration in Europe: An Opportunity for Architecture and Architects

The seminar "Housing Regeneration in Europe: an Opportunity for Architecture and Architects" is inspired by the increasing number of interesting projects and architectural practices dealing with spatial, typological and technical innovation connected to the regeneration of collective residential buildings and neighborhoods all over Europe. This theme combines simultaneously many different issues: the participation or the relocation of the inhabitants, the typological innovation in relation to contemporary practices, the work on the envelope and the image of the building, the effects that these projects are able to produce at the urban scale, especially in peripheral urban and metropolitan areas.

The seminar is aimed at generating a fruitful debate among professionals, researchers and students, discussing relevant experiences and approaches that are producing new tools, new solutions and new references, implementing our common disciplinary knowledge.

This seminar has been developed within the "territorial fragility" project promoted by the Department of Architecture and Urban Studies. It results from the synergy between two research lines: ForDwell "Forms, uses and spaces for contemporary dwelling. New solutions for new households" and PeriFrag "Urban and metropolitan peripheries in fragile territories"
